Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest 2003: Results

The goal of this international literary parody contest is to submit bad opening sentences to imaginary novels. The competition honors Victorian novelist Edward George Earl Bulwer-Lytton (1803-1873). Bulwer-Lytton is best known for his words, “It was a dark and stormy night,” and also “the pen is mightier than the sword.”

Runner-Up: The flock of geese flew overhead in a “V” formation — not in an old-fashioned-looking Times New Roman kind of a “V,” branched out slightly at the two opposite arms at the top of the “V”, nor in a more modern-looking, straight and crisp, linear Arial sort of “V” (although since they were flying, Arial might have been appropriate), but in a slightly asymmetric, tilting off-to-one-side sort of italicized Courier New-like “V” - and LaFonte knew that he was just the type of man to know the difference. (John Dotson, U.S. Naval Officer, Arlington, VA)

Runner-Up: On the fourth day of his exploration of the Amazon, Byron climbed out of his inner tube, checked the latest news on his personal digital assistant (hereafter PDA) outfitted with wireless technology, and realized that the gnawing he felt in his stomach was not fear—no, he was not afraid, rather elated—nor was it tension—no, he was actually rather relaxed—so it was in all probability a parasite. (Chuck Keelan & Stern Stewart, New York)

Winner—Detective: Detective Inspector Mike Norman slipped six fingers into his overcoat pocket, five of them clad in a latex glove and attached to his palm, while the sixth was wrapped in a plastic evidence bag and apparently belonged to the kidnapped pianist, Ricardo Moore, or, as it now seemed likely, the kidnapped ex-pianist, Ricardo Moore. (Alan Campbell, Edinburgh, Scotland)
