THE PROGRAM and OBJECTIVES

This all-day program is designed for the general practitioner and the dental team to improve their understanding of periodontal disease and its effective treatment. The program is clinically based and practical and will provide improved evaluation and interpretation concepts for patient examinations. All aspects of periodontal treatment will be discussed providing goals, benefits and limitations of each of the commonly used procedures.

The second part of the program will focus on those restorative responsibilities involved in creating optimal esthetic results with dental implants. Treatment planning, sequencing, role of the interim provisional will be reviewed. Methods to establish an optimal hard and soft tissue foundation will also be described. Finally, the value of and methods to create screw-retained implant provisionals will be discussed to shape peri-implant tissues for the ideal esthetic result.

At the completion of this course, participants should be able to:
- Determine which medical issues and patient medications most influence the periodontal tissues and sequencing of ideal treatment;
- Evaluate the results of a comprehensive oral and radiographic examination with a better understanding of what dental conditions exist;
- Determine the benefits and limitations of various forms of non-surgical periodontal therapy;
- Understand the benefits of various periodontal surgical procedures to assist in creating an optimal functional result;
- Interpret which clinical conditions are ideally suited for dental implant consideration and how to sequence therapy for the ideal esthetic result; and
- Understand the basis for hard and soft tissue surgical procedures to establish an ideal foundation for dental implants.
